What Brad Pitt smells like?

Though you answered above question at the backstage of Oscars ...

"I didn't smell him, I'm not dog."

I was a little disappointed that Yuh-Jung Youn ニャソ seemed to have confused the answer♪

When I saw your answered above question at the backstage of Oscars I was disappointed♪

At this rate, it would be a fad to talk about the scent of beautiful people?

I was so worried♪

I left this answer as it is...

Isn't it a trend to talk about the scent of beautiful people?

I hate that♪

I want to have fun talking about scents when talking about beautiful people, like when talking about beautiful flowers♪

I want to create a society where people can talk about fragrances in a fun way, like when talking about beautiful people and beautiful flowers♪

Therefore...

Would you like to ask Yuh-Jung Youn ニャソ to help us realize a society where we can talk about beautiful people and scents as much as we can when talking about beautiful flowers? m9(^o^)b

>We can think about it from the movie of 'Minari'.... Discrimination of Asian people
> "I have to ask you. What did you guys talk about, and what did he smell like?" This is the question that actress Yoon received after the first Oscar for Best Actress in Korea. Actress Yoon answered this racist question as follows. "I didn't smell him. I'm not a dog."
> The Oscar winner is a Korean actress Yoon. In the American society where Asian hate crimes are rampant, she proudly grabbed her trophy. In her acceptance speech, she said: "My son who lives in LA worries about my coming to States for the Oscar because I might get hurt on the street or something like that."
> Why was Yoon, the winner of very prestigious awards in the film industry including Oscar and Academy and receiving big applause for her sensible acceptance speech asked a racist question like that? Why should she come to the United States to accept such advice from her son and take risks? The answer can be found in Asian discrimination in America.
